Dedicated to Preserving the Unique History of Mineral Point

Stroschein Steps Up Kackley Goals Are Realized

Jim Stroschein is the new President of the Mineral Point Historical Society, succeeding Jim Kackley, who retired from the Board of Directors after completing most of his objectives for the organization.

At the January 29, 2006 Annual Meeting, Nominating Committee Chair Peter Pfothenhauer introduced a slate that included two recommended new Board members, Matt Ostergrant and Steve Scheid, who were subsequently elected by the meeting's membership to serve three-year terms. The Board then selected Stroschein to head the Society for the coming year. Mark Speltz will serve as Secretary and Nancy Pfothenhauer will keep the MPHS financial records as Treasurer.

Retiring board members Phyllis Bennett, Jeanne Lambin and Gary Tibbits were recognized for their support of the Society.

Jim Kackley, elected as President in 2004, announced that he will retire from the Board to balance his hefty work schedule. Kackley has done double duty, serving as President and Treasurer, and also chaired the Stewardship Fund committee during the years he worked to bring strategic planning and strong organizational structure to the Society. Most of the Kackley goals have been achieved: successful fundraising for Phase II of the house restoration program, increased membership, strong educational activity and stimulation of an effective mix of private and public events to make Orchard Lawn "the House restoration program. As an MPHS officer, he has chaired committees, edited the newsletter, presented lyceums, hosted events and trained volunteers. His great personal interest in the recreation of the Gundry library resulted in the room's return to its documented Gilded Age elegance. He is considered to be the resident authority on "things historic" at Orchard Lawn.

"In a relatively short time, Jim Kackley has made incredible contributions to our quest to preserve the history and identity of Mineral Point," said Stroschein. "In particular, his near-heroic efforts to save the Railroad Depot, and his leadership of the historical society." Stroschein continued, "The Society owes him a debt of gratitude for his steadfast support and generosity, and I am hopeful that I can lean on him for advice."

"This is an exciting time for the organization," he said. "In two years, when the Phase II restoration is complete, we will have achieved a milestone that our volunteers have dreamed about for 65 years. Orchard Lawn will be a well-maintained interpretive center, not a construction project. The Society will be able to turn its full attention to the gathering and telling of the history of Mineral Point and our region." ●

Phase II is "Good to Go!"

By Jim Stroschein, Fundraising Chairman

Opportunity knocked on the front door at Orchard Lawn, and the door opened wide.

It started in October of 2003 when Jim Kackley, Nancy Pfothenauer, Dean Connors and I arrived at the Victorian Treasure Inn in Lodi, Wisconsin to present our Phase II plans to the Jeffris Family Foundation board of directors. When I asked our group to show up for a presentation rehearsal at Orchard Lawn a few nights earlier, I thought I noticed a slight smile from Jim K. I knew Jim had been through countless proposal pitches in his business career, and could recognize a winning approach. But I wanted everything to be perfect. It was. Jim, Dean and Nancy performed flawlessly and the next day Tom Jeffris called me to deliver the good news: Our proposal was accepted. We had two years to raise $155,000. If we were successful, the foundation would match our funds and we could finish the restoration of Orchard Lawn. If we didn't raise our half, we'd get nothing.

Two years! Plenty of time! In 1999 we had only one year to raise the funds for Phase I. None of us from that group had major fundraising experience. (I sold light bulbs door-to-door as a Cub Scout but nobody seemed very impressed by that.) This time I felt ready.

Well, the two years flew by. Scott Dietrich and I assembled the materials for a fundraising booklet and Kristin Mitchell did a beautiful design. We had a kick-off party, wine and dined, and tried to shine. Materials were sent out to all Phase I donors, society members, as many Gundry family members as Joan Young could find for us, and anyone else I could think of. Doug at the post office raised his eyebrows when I sent packets to Costa Rica, Paris and Hawaii.

The campaign wore on. Tsunamis and Hurricane Katrina did not help steady the nerves of the former light bulb salesman. But our members came through. We received three outstanding gifts from members of the Gundry family. Dean and Jim and Barbe and so many others were extremely generous. A man (I still have not met him face-to-face) saw a story about us in the Wisconsin State Journal, called me and donated $10,000. It is a deep honor to deal with people who care so much.

Our challenge grant was $155,000. I'm pleased to say that we raised $167,610 in gifts and pledges from 117 donors in 18 states. Some of the sweetest words came from Peggy at the Jeffris Foundation when she said, "You have met the terms of the grant. You can start using the money. Congratulations."

Raise your glasses, Mineral Point Historical Society! Let's toast Tom Jeffris and all of you who cared about preserving a true Mineral Point and Wisconsin landmark. ●

What's going to be the first step in the restoration?

The preservation and analysis of evidence. Orchard Lawn is rich because the main block of the house has not been gutted and the evidence of prior finishes is, in many cases, intact. The interior spaces of Orchard Lawn will be photographed in their current condition. Small slices of wood trim in each room will be taken for analysis under a microscope to determine the historic paint chronology (the colors of paint built up over time). Ceilings and walls will be thoroughly searched for surviving wallpaper fragments or evidence of stylized painting. Scraps of relevant material (fabrics, carpet, linoleum, etc.) from all time periods will be saved and catalogued and will become part of the decorative history of the house. The opportunity to gather this evidence is fleeting and must be done before the hammers and the crowbars come out. The restoration is expected to be completed in 2008. ●

A Very Special Christmas Visit

By Therese Hess, MPHS Director

Lifka Bennett's fifth grade class knows what "living history" means. Every year, for at least the last 17 years, her students at the Mineral Point Elementary School get to go back in time, to experience different events and festivities as they occurred in the 19th Century.

This past year, it was "Christmas in the 1800s," and on December 15th, the 53 students and their chaperones visited the Gundry House.

On this special enrichment day, the boys and girls went to school dressed in the styles of the 1800s and spent the morning making colonial and Victorian Christmas presents and ornaments. In the afternoon, they toured the House.

Tour guide for the group was Doris Schaaf (high-lighted in an article on volunteers elsewhere in this issue). She handled the large group expertly and kept them in rapt attention, pointing out significant details in each room and fielding questions from the interested young tourists about the building and the Gundry Family.

One of the chaperones was Tom Mielke, dressed in colonial-era formal black, including top hat. Tom is also a long-time tour guide at the Gundry House and added his own special knowledge about the family history, the architecture of the building, and some of the special collections.

Between them, Doris and Tom gave the students a thorough, engrossing snapshot of life in the early years at Orchard Lawn. I followed behind the groups as they toured, and marveled at both the expertise of the guides and the involvement of the students.

In a "Thank You" note from Ms. Bennett, she included the following:

"Especially intriguing to the students

And this note came to the office separately:

"Dear Mineral Point Historical Society, I had lots of fun touring the Gundry mansion! It is definitely a place I would recommend to others!

I loved seeing all the rooms and I thought they were beautiful. Another thing I liked about the tour was seeing all the furniture and seeing the old signs upstairs. Thank you again for letting us come to the mansion and for plowing the driveway so we didn't get snowy. I had a great time.

Sincerely, Maggie Grimm and the 5th grade."

The day was indeed snowy, and the youngsters were asked to leave their boots and other wet footwear in the kitchen. While they toured in stocking feet, I looked back at the kitchen floor—almost totally covered in little pairs of galoshes, sneakers, high heels, granny boots, sandals, and worn leathers with broken laces, amid rivulets of melting snow. I wish I had taken a photo. Maybe it was just the season, but my heart was warmed looking at all those shoes and hearing the chatter and laughter of boys and girls throughout the house. It might have been like that for the Gundry clan at Christmas time. ●

She was very proud to point this out to her peers. The bedroom quilt with the names was fun, as many students located family names. The students were pointing out to me lots of points of interest in your upstairs historical room with various collections. Great reviews came from the students as they all wanted to tell about what they liked best."

Get Started in Genealogy

You have a little knowledge about your family's roots, right? And you have a consuming curiosity, too? Well, you may be a candidate for a hobby that has many rewards, a number of frustrations, average difficulty and what may grow to be an overwhelming expenditure of your time.

The word genealogy is derived from the Greek, and means "the study of family history and descent." Millions of people are engaged in some form of genealogy. Some want to answer puzzling questions like, "Why did Grandma never speak about her parents?" Others want to gain a sense of who their ancestors were and how they lived. Some move even further into the hobby and use intensive research to compile a book, or join a heritage society.

The time involved depends on the family, and on your continuing interest. Here is a quick list, to let you get a taste of genealogy without great expense. All you need is a healthy curiosity, a computer, and a few idle hours you'd like to see turn productive.

1. Gather together everything you have — papers, photos, documents and heirlooms — and ask your relatives if they have anything to add to the pile.
2. Take time to interview family members, collect names, dates and stories.

3. Select a single surname, an individual, to begin more advanced research. And use that focus as you visit genealogical sites. The Mineral Point Room, part of the public library, is a valuable resource; 60 percent of the work they do for the public is in the area of genealogy. Historical Societies and Museums are offering on-line access to family and community references. And, of course, the Internet holds an almost-infinite number of websites. (Just "googling" your family name is an adventure.) Clicking on "genealogy" gets you addresses that allow you to search by pulling up available information from pedigree databases, message boards and other resources. Don't trust everything you see, however!

4. Seek out actual source data — census records, wills, birth/marriage/death certificates, land deeds and abstracts, immigration records, etc. It's best to use anything you find on-line as a hint or a clue, but not as fact unless you see the original source documents.
5. Start a family tree chart and use other genealogical forms, to nudge the pieces into place.
6. Organize everything. Take notes, make copies. Save and date it all!
7. Visit places where your family lived, and check courthouses, cemeteries and churches for information. Document everything as you go, and take photographs.
8. When you've gone as far as you can go, return to step 3 (pick a single surname) and pick another single surname, and mount another search with the new focus.
9. Remember, when it isn't fun anymore, put all the stuff you've collected in a box in the attic. It may be useful in the future, when someone else decides to climb your family tree. ●

Try the largest Internet site, Ancestry.com, for loads of information and frequent updates. If you are hooked on genealogy, and take everything they offer, plan to spend about $200 a year -- still not really a pricey hobby!

“Way to Go!” a No-Brainer: Walker House Revival

By Frank Beaman

Picking this month's winner in the MPHS “Way to Go!” competition was an easy task — we simply marked the event that is “the talk of the town:” the sale of the historic Walker House to Joe and Sue Dickinson.

Built in three stages as the Mineral Point Hotel, the old stone building stretches along the bluffs behind Water Street, nestling into the hillside to surround the hotel's guests with Wisconsin's natural wonders. One of the state's best-known resorts in its heyday, the Walker House brought visitors to Mineral Point from the 1850s, when William Walker switched his livelihood from groceries to inn-keeping. The hotel has been vacant since 1994, a victim of changing times, but Harvey Glanzer maintained its rooms with great affection for both the structure and its history.

Enter the Dickinsons. Sue, a Janesville native, worked in data processing. Joe, born in Rockford, specialized in large-scale electronics and ergonomic design for business offices. They had lived in Washington for 26 years, and began to talk about a move into the lodging industry four years ago when they investigated the purchase of a hotel in the Cascade Mountains.

A friend in Rockford tipped them off to the possibilities at the Walker House, and Joe drove up for a look at the building two years ago. He liked what he saw. Sue was less impressed. “It's just a big warehouse,” she said, “and I thought Joe was crazy.” But when she walked through the hotel, her attitude changed to enthusiasm. “The place jumped into my heart,” she said.

They tracked down building-owner Glanzer, who told them he was uncomfortable with long-range negotiating by telephone. The now-determined Dickinsons then threw a few belongings into the back of their pick-up truck, and moved into a small apartment in Mineral Point in January 2005. But it was two more months before Harvey finally pushed a slip of paper across a table, months would be an impossibility. However, the building is in remarkably good condition. The Dickinsons were working in the big kitchen on the day I visited, and they pointed out that “everything works.” There are rooms filled with tables, chairs, china, silverware and linens. The guest rooms are furnished with items brought in during the years Harvey ran the hotel. The damage from roof leaks and vandalism will be repaired, and rumors about mold and other severe problems simply proved false — most of the rooms don't even show cracks in the plaster!

The heating and cooling system will be revamped “to make you comfortable without knowing why.” The music in the Pub will be computer/audio streamed from Dublin, and live music will be featured. Cornwall's influence will be expressed with Joe's collection of horse brasses and other decorating touches, but “it won't be a museum.”

History is important to the Dickinsons, and they spend a significant part of their work days in research, to “do it right.” The couple puts it this way: “We came to Mineral Point because we wanted to step off the four-lane highway and come back to a small town.” And when their project is lovingly completed, “You'll think you stepped back in time.”

What about the storied ghosts — as many as 22 of them? “There are no malicious spirits in this place,” say the Dickinsons, “but instead we feel a lot of positive energy here.” And, “If there are ghosts in the Walker House, they want it to open up again, so they'll have some company.” ● with a sale price. Joe wrote down another figure. They met somewhere in the middle.

The sale, and subsequent financing, are a tribute to a cooperative effort by the seller, the buyers, the bank, the office of Economic Development and the City Council. Everyone wanted to see the old hotel come back to life.

It will, and soon. During a January tour of the Walker House, Joe told me they plan to open the restaurant, the striking Pub Room, and the guest quarters during the Summer of 2006. Before walking around in the rooms, I would have thought that an opening in a few

MPHS Lyceums

The Wisconsin Glacier and the Driftless Region

At the MPHS Annual Meeting on January 29, 2006, UW-Madison history professor emeritus and noted author Norman Risjord traced the path of the Wisconsin glacier and its impact on the Badger State, explaining why the ice bypassed the Lead Region.

Want to know more? Read Prof. Risjord's 1995 book, Wisconsin: The Story of the Badger State.

Native American Rock Art in Southwest Wisc.

Dave Lowe, of Prairie Hawk in Dodgeville, conducted field surveys in the fields of Iowa County and in 20 years single-handedly moved the total of verified Rock Art Sites from just 17 to almost 100. Lowe will put his discoveries into context, and describe the reactions of landowners when he surprises them by telling them they have ancient artwork on land they've lived on for generations.

After his presentation, Lowe invites members of the audience to bring him any locally-found Native American artifacts (spear points, pottery shards, etc.) for his opinion on origin.

Mineral Pointers Remember

This is the third year for this event, back by popular demand — a panel discussion with three long-time Mineral Point residents. This year's panel will include George & Iva Bechtel and Bob Regan, who will recall days when the train whistles blew, kids swam in Shake Rag Lake and threshing bees were held in the farm fields. Join us for an enjoyable look back in time!

Notes from the President

By Jim Kackley, President, Mineral Point Historical Society

As I said at our recent annual meeting, 2005 was another very strong year for the Mineral Point Historical Society. What I'm most pleased about is that Orchard Lawn is rapidly becoming what we all hoped—The Living Room of Mineral Point.

I'm delighted that last year the house and grounds were used to a greater extent than ever before. We had weddings, reunions, anniversaries, church picnics, rehearsal dinners, receptions, civic dinners, conferences and much more. We had band concerts, Jammin' on the Porch, Poe nights, a Valentine's Day reception, and the kickoff gala for our Phase II Restoration. We had individual tours, bus tours, and school groups.

As great as all these were, what I enjoyed most was driving by Orchard lawn and seeing family picnics, couples enjoying a glass of wine in the gazebo, or lounging on the porch, or just strolling through the grounds.

We continued our strong efforts in education, our principal mission. We held lyceums, meetings with the Wisconsin Historical Society Board, and exhibits, including our new exhibit, The Signs of Mineral Point. Our newsletter has been greatly expanded and is now a major part of our education mission.

We successfully completed our Phase II fund-raising campaign and are now poised to complete the house and grounds restoration over the next two years.

All in all it was a wonderful year. I expect 2006 will be even better,

Jim Stroschein has succeeded me as President of the Society, and I'm delighted. Jim has been the "spiritual leader" of the Society for several years and has the passion and background to effectively lead the Society in the years to come.

I close by thanking all of our great volunteers for a marvelous effort in 2005 as well as Therese Hess, our Executive Director. And to Dean Connors — my admiration is unceasing! Thanks for all you've done to make us what we are. ●

MPHS Store a Success

Despite some rough treatment by Wisconsin's winter weather, the MPHS Christmas Store on High Street proved a worthwhile project. While sales could not exactly be called "brisk," the shop welcomed a good number of customers, created lively conversation about history and the Society, and brought about $1,000 to the cash box.

In a cooperative effort with the Bohlin Gallery and Long Branch Gallery, our volunteers, Nancy Pfothauer, Therese Hess, Frank & Sandee Beaman, and Mark Speltz offered books, Fernek's note cards, photo cards, pewter Pointer dogs, art work and a variety of items from Orchard Lawn storage. We sold several copies of the invaluable History of Iowa County, Wisconsin 1881. And there was great interest in vintage photographs from the MPHS collections, printed by Phil Mrozinski and framed by Scott Dietrich.

Out on the snowy streets, a belligerent Ebenezer Scrooge, a/k/a Roland Sardeson, pushed passersby in our direction, promising a glimpse into local history.

The general feeling was that the small-scale experiment in retailing was worthwhile. We moved some of our storehouse of materials from the Gundry House closets and attic into the hands of our neighbors. Most important, however, we advanced the idea that history — local history — is a great way to stuff the holiday stocking. ●

From the Director

By Therese Hess, Executive Director, Mineral Point Historical Society

Happy New Year, Readers! It looks like 2006 will be another exciting and productive year for our Historical Society. Phase II of our Restoration Plan is already underway, as explained in Jim Stroschein's fine article on Page 2 of this newsletter. We have many new members, thanks to our Fall Membership Campaign which exceeded prior years in both number of members and total funds raised. And, best of all, several of you responded to our call for volunteer help at Orchard Lawn.

Later in the Spring, we will have an orientation for all volunteers, new and returning, to get acquainted and learn the details of various volunteer positions.

Because we will have a longer tour season this year than last, we especially need volunteers to guide visitors through the Gundry House on weekends, from mid-May to mid-October. If you can spare just one three-hour block of time, once a month, please consider becoming an Orchard Lawn Tour Guide. Special training will be provided, and all guides receive a guidebook to help remember and relate the interesting history, architecture, and anecdotes associated with the Gundry House.

There are all kinds of other volunteer opportunities, too, depending on your interests and expertise — indoor or outdoor, labor intensive or hi-tech, rote or creative, one-time or on-going — the list is long and can expand as we learn about your talents and available time, and match them to our needs and future plans. Just call or email us if you can help, and we will respond with assignments and gratitude.

Most people volunteer simply because it feels good to help others. Even so, the MPHS offers some additional benefits: free membership for 15 hours of service; 10 percent off on rentals and gift shop items for 50 hours of service; and a copy of the limited-edition biography of Joseph Gundry for 100 hours of service. Finally, after the close of the tour season in October, there will be a special, first-annual, Volunteer Recognition Event where we can celebrate the combined efforts of all who help make the Gundry House "The Living Room of Mineral Point." ●

Our Volunteers

Generosity is the element that makes non-profit organizations succeed. You often hear about the gift of treasure, but we sometimes fail to recognize an equally important gift: the gift of time. So, in this and future issues of the newsletter, we pay tribute to our cherished volunteers, beginning with Doris Schaaf, a longtime supporter of Orchard Lawn.

Doris has always loved history; it was her favorite subject in school. She also likes to be with other people, talking and exchanging information. Small wonder, then, that she has become a regular, frequent, volunteer tour guide at the Gundry House.

Doris has been welcoming tourists at Orchard Lawn and sharing her expertise about the house and grounds with them since 2001, when she responded to a request for volunteers made at her former workplace, Alliant Energy. But, she says, she has always, "for as long as I can remember," been a member of the Mineral Point Historical Society.

When asked if she volunteered in any other capacity at Orchard Lawn, she said, "No, but I help with everything everywhere else. Anytime anybody asks. I just like to help." She said she would never turn down a request for help, especially from MPHS, even if it meant altering her own plans.

Although retired from Alliant since 1989, Doris continues to take advantage of the company's matching gifts program. Over the years, she has donated money as well as time to MPHS, and Alliant matches her gifts, dollar for dollar, and dollar for hour of volunteer service.

Doris is, herself, a true gift to our Society. Thank you, Doris. ●

Yep, It's the Penhallegon Store

We've had plenty of reaction to our vintage photo of the dry goods store, first run six months ago. We heard from former MPHS stalwart George Bechtel, of Madison, that "the W.J. Penhallegon store was three floors of wonder, as attractive in its day as the eight floors of Marshall Field's on State Street in Chicago."

Bechtel also told us, in his "fan letter" on the December newsletter, "I have notes and personal memory of the eleven men who saved the Gundry mansion. Though not blessed with a lot of money, they managed to raise barely enough to stop the wreckers. The group included a dentist, a lawyer, a junk dealer and the Pendarvis boys. They had just one objective: to save a significant bit of the old town." He went on, "The founders of the Historical Society would feel very proud of what you, the 'new natives,' are accomplishing."

That's the kind of feedback that puts a little extra spring in a newsletter editor's step!

From the MPHS Photo Collection

This storefront at historic 220-229 High Street has a great history. Built in 1892, as monumentally noted on the building's pediment, this has been the location for a downtown grocery store for many generations. The photo of the folks out front on the boardwalk was taken in 1894, but most of us remember the building as the more recent home of Point IGA, under Jeff Basting's ownership. Today, it houses the Johnson & Block accounting firm. By the way, we checked into the local figures, comparing 2006 with 114 years ago, and the sales of Oysters are waaaaaay down.
